Presidential Citation Award

Procedures
The primary nominator of a candidate should summarize the curriculum vitae highlighting those accomplishments that are relevant to the award.

Letters of support should be limited to ten consisting of the following: No more than three from former or current trainees, no more than three from colleagues or associates who work in the same institution or who practice in the same community, and no more than four "outside" letters from fellows of the College who do not fit into the two categories mentioned. Supporting letters should cite specific examples of contributions that qualify the candidate for the award.

A candidate may be proposed for an award no more than three consecutive years. Listed are criteria for the various awards of the American College of Cardiology. Recent recipients are also listed.

Distinguished Fellow Award
This individual shall be a fellow of the College who is well recognized for his/her service to the College and whose activities are considered to qualify him/her as a role model for others. Effective with the 1997 awards, former College presidents are not eligible for this award.

International Service Award

Individual who has demonstrated a commitment to medically developing or underdeveloped countries, and, through his/her benevolent actions, has provided a specific service to enhance cardiovascular care and/or education in these countries. The award should recognize service and should not be tied to leadership in the international cardiovascular community. It should not necessarily be awarded yearly, but only on an 'as appropriate' basis.

The nominees will be solicited through the standard procedures followed by the Awards Committee. The final list of nominees obtained through this solicitation will be forwarded to the International Committee who will recommend the recipient to the Awards Committee/Board of Trustees.

Master American College of Cardiology, M.A.C.C.
This individual will have been a dedicated fellow of the College for more than fifteen years. No more than four Master designations will be awarded each year and one of these four awards will recognize the outgoing president of the College.

Officers and Trustees of the College as individuals will be invited annually to nominate candidates for Master designation to the Awards Committee, which will make its recommendations to the Board of Trustees at its Fall meeting. The Awards Committee will not offer its own nominations and members are not eligible for Master designation while serving on the committee. The first awards were given in March 1998.
